7 Caregiving Hacks Family Caregivers Should Know

Last Updated February 14, 2022

Get Started

Falls are the feared enemy of caregivers and older adults everywhere as they are often the reason more care or supervision is required. Whether it's Parkinson's, macular degeneration or general weakness following surgery, make sure the home is free of any fall hazards. The first step recommended by all veteran caregivers? Ditch the throw rugs.

Then, do a walk-through of your loved one's home using his cane or walker, and determine where the problem areas are. You may need to hire a contractor or enlist a handy family member to create wider door frames, eliminate raised thresholds or step-downs into rooms or make other accommodations to reduce the risk of falling.

If your loved one should not be using the stairs without support or supervision, lock the door to the basement or outdoor steps (a small, inexpensive alarm for these doors may also be a good investment).

Click here for 10 tactics to fall-proof your loved one's home.

3. Use a Video Monitor

Caring for someone with Alzheimer's or dementia? Then you're probably concerned about wandering — which is probably keeping you from getting adequate rest. Position a video monitor in a prominent place (many can now be paired with an app that sends alerts to your smartphone) for an extra pair of eyes on your loved one, day or night, in any place of the home when/where wandering occurs.

4. Change Your Dinnerware

One major advantage of modern banking that's particularly helpful for caregivers? Automation. Online bill paying through a reputable bank and server is safe and secure. Because you can set it and forget it, that's one less thing for which you have to worry. Certain bills may still require a paper trail process, but for all recurring bills, automatic payments are a great way to streamline an older loved one's need for financial support. Also, as you're spending more time focusing on Mom or Dad's finances, it's not a bad idea for you as the caregiver to "set and forget" your bills, too.

7. Find Reprieve With Respite

Caring for a parent or senior loved one is an exhausting task. It requires the honing of skills you may not yet have, and family members who unexpectedly become family caregivers for their parent or loved one risk burning out, which carries significant risks for both loved ones and their caregivers.

By creating your command central and streamlining basic daily routines throughout the home as described above, you're also making it easier to bring in additional team members to the house — both family members and professionals. Caregivers often feel alone, and in turn, try to do it alone. But to sustain your strength for the duration of caregiving, expanding the team is one of the most valuable hacks a family caregiver should know.
